Argentine journalist Jorge Lanata is not renewing his contract with media broadcaster CNN. According to the network, Lanata has decided to end his 11 years at the network. In an interview with The New York Times, CNN chief news executive Paul Cruickshank said that the network will reach out to other journalists in the coming days to see whether they would be interested in joining the Spanish-language network. Lanata's departure comes just days after the prominent Argentinian journalist spoke to The Guardian about his fears about growing government violence and press intimidation in Argentina. "We're seeing the worst case of press freedom that we've ever seen in Latin America," Lanata told the British news outlet. "In the worst years it was a dictatorship, now it's a democracy." Lanata said that attacks against him and other journalists in Argentina increased after the 2015 election, citing an incident where a physical assault was recorded against him on live television, and his subsequent suspension from Twitter. He added that journalists who dared to report on government violence risked abuse or detention. Lanata also warned that currently imprisoned former President Cristina Fernández de Kirchner may attempt to change the constitution to permit her presidential successor, Mauricio Macri, to run for a third term in office. Aslanata's resignation comes after a tumultuous year at CNN, culminating in the presidential election defeat of Hillary Clinton to Donald Trump. 6d1f23a050
